It's 2008, and Dop is going to finesse their way into your ears! This Parisian trio has brought their diverse instrumental skills to the studio to make dance tracks overflowing with the musicality everyone is craving. Add that to their reputation for kinetic live shows, and you have a new musical organism with a lot of fans. "The Lighthouse" is Dop's third EP, following up records on impeccable indies Milnor Modern and Circus Company.

"Lighthouse" is balanced delicately in between Techno and House, making it a bridge track to push all kinds of sets in new – and probably more organic – directions. The intro is a great instrumental showing off a chunky beat, not quite broken, and the kind of raw jazz flute buzzes that don't come in samplers. When the soulful vocal enters the scene, the drums lock in and the night moves one step toward lovefest. Don't laugh, we've seen it happen.

With "Merci," Dop stretches out more towards Techno, adding up layers of gently warbling synths to make a calm yet sinister track, handcrafted electronics at its best. "Under The Rain" ends things with an experimental sound collage / poem – musique concrète for the after-after-party.
